Military recruitment has become commonplace on high school campuses thanks to a little-known provision of the education law "No Child Left Behind," which forces schools to open their doors to the military or risk losing federal funds. Schools are also being forced to turn over private information about students to the Pentagon, which has angered many parents. NOW looks at how some parents are fighting back, worried that the military is reeling in impressionable kids with deceptive pitches and by exaggerating benefits. Minister of the Pilgrim United Church of Christ in Carlsbad, CA, Madison Shockley says separation of church and state doesn't mean that churches can't act in political ways. "I can't understand a definition of politics that doesn't impact every aspect of life," he tells David Brancaccio. "Whether it's seeking peace in the world, or whether it's seeking equality economically for all personal of these things have political ramifications." Shockley's powerful and insightful commentaries have been published in papers across the country.

NOW investigates the latest on potentially deadly targets for terrorists- America's nuclear power plants, which have been the focus of increased security efforts since 9/11. While the industry and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission say the nation's nuclear reactors are up to meeting the terrorist threat, critics believe new security measures don't go far enough and that dangerous targets, including spent nuclear fuel rods stored outside the containment domes, remain exposed to attack. The report evaluates how vulnerable the facilities are to terrorism and sheds light on the new security standards. In October, the President signed a bill that gives broad immunity to gun manufacturers and retailers from civil law suits. And last year, the gun industry won a provision to block critical information on crime guns from reaching the public and even local law enforcement officials. Why would they do that? Insider Robert Ricker says it's because of profits. NOW talks to Ricker, the first major whistleblower from the gun industry, who says major gun manufacturers are deliberately looking the other way while some dealers sell their guns to criminals. Ricker, former executive director of the American Shooting Sports Council, is now battling the industry he used to protect and says they could do a lot more to take illegal guns off our streets. The candidates courted them as a key vote in the last Presidential election, but are things getting better or worse for America's struggling single women? NOW reports on what issues are important to single women through the eyes of one Nevada mom, who is trying to make ends meet in the face of skyrocketing health insurance and fuel costs.

Thousands of immigrant workers are being lured into New Orleans to help rebuild the city after Hurricane Katrina. But are corporations shutting out the local workforce and boosting profits by hiring these workers with low pay, no benefits, and awful working conditions? NOW Senior Correspondent Maria Hinojosa looks at who's benefiting from the reconstruction along the Gulf Coast, and how the Bush Administration's post-Katrina policies might have encouraged the exploitation of workers. This week, the Senate voted overwhelmingly for an amendment that called for the White House to give progress reports on the Iraq war. What does that vote, as well as the on-going CIA leak investigation, mean for the Bush Administration? "There's no question this president and this presidency is weakened," says John Dean, who served as counsel to Richard Nixon thirty years ago.

Alfred Kinsey was a little-known biologist at Indiana University when, in the 1940s, he began compiling exhaustive data from tens of thousands of interviews about the sexual practices of men and women. The results of that research were the explosive, best-selling "Kinsey Reports." Implicit in the revolutionary study was a plea for greater tolerance. "Such terms as abnormal, unnatural, oversexed, and undersexed," wrote Harper's Magazine, "have little validity in the light of Professor Kinsey's revelations." The man behind the inflammatory reports seemed at first glance an unlikely "revolutionary." Publicly, he was an erudite, tweedy academic, but in private Kinsey was far more complex. As his interest in sex research deepened so did his wide-ranging sexual experimentation. Though his work was groundbreaking and up-ended established ideas about sexual practices in America, his own sexual orientation and personal beliefs almost certainly shaped and biased his findings. Through interviews with his research assistants, his children, people who took his sex questionnaire, his biographers, and intellectual historians, this probing documentary assesses Kinsey's remarkable achievements, while examining how his personal life shaped his career.

The past few years has seen an explosion in the popularity-and profitability-of complementary and alternative medicine (CAM). Under pressure from everyone from consumers to Congress-and tempted by huge grants-major hospitals and medical schools have embraced therapies that they once dismissed as quackery. So accepted, in fact, have alternative medical treatments become that an entire center of the National Institutes of Health is now devoted to CAM. But the question remains: Do these treatments actually work? In "The Alternative Fix," FRONTLINE examines the controversy over complementary and alternative medical treatments. Through interviews with staunch supporters, skeptical scientists, and observers on both sides of the debate, the one-hour documentary examines how these popular treatments are facing increased scrutiny as the first real studies of their effectiveness are published, and questions whether hospitals that offer alternative therapies are conveying a sense of legitimacy on these largely untested and scientifically unproven treatments.

In "Global Health: America's Response" NOW examines the U.S.'s HIV/AIDS policy from its beginning in the early 1980s through President Bush's historic plan, announced in 2003, to spend $15 billion for treatment and prevention of HIV/AIDS around the world. The one-hour documentary takes viewers on the ground in Uganda to examine how Uganda's successful three-pronged approach, which has become known as ABC: "Abstinence," "Be faithful," and "Condom use," has sparked controversy among both American and Ugandan groups, which don't believe condoms are effective in reducing HIV prevalence and that they contribute to promiscuity. Buoyed by the fact that at least 33% of U.S. money in President Bush's plan set aside for prevention must go to groups that promote so-called "abstinence-only" programs, which downplay or ignore the importance of condoms in HIV prevention.

"Disease Warriors/Rise of the Superbugs" Before there was an understanding of the cause of disease, protectors of public health had only careful surveillance and quarantine to fight epidemics. The first episode chronicles the groundbreaking work of 19th-century researchers, such as scientist Louis Pasteur, who discovered that germs cause illness and developed the first vaccines. Despite the progress in combating disease, the world still faces major challenges in getting basic care to those who need it and in creating new ways to combat modern nemeses such as AIDS. It's difficult to imagine a world without medicines, yet before the 20th century, there weren't any. This episode chronicles the fight against new resistant bugs and the search for "magic bullets", the wonder drugs that have become a mainstay of modern medicine. From the development of the first drug to treat syphilis to the discovery of penicillin and new classes of antibiotics, this program recounts the stunning successes of today's medicines while examining the growing dangers presented by antibiotic-resistant strains of diseases such as tuberculosis.

Length: 120

Format: Documentary

The first episode explores the great paradox of global health: at the dawn of the 21st century, most of the deadliest diseases known to humankind can be prevented, treated or cured - yet millions die needlessly because the benefits of modern medicine and public health fail to reach them. What are the obstacles to providing care to populations in need? How do we overcome these barriers and build effective, sustainable delivery systems? From Kenya to Thailand, from Chad to Bangladesh, the program chronicles innovative health programs and charismatic leaders who, against all odds, "deliver the goods" to millions of individuals - and are inspiring a new vision for the future of global health. Vector-borne diseases - those that rely on insects and animals to spread infectious agents - have consistently posed a threat to public health. Today, the most dangerous vector on earth is the mosquito. From malaria to yellow fever to West Nile virus, mosquito-borne diseases continue to threaten the health of millions around the world - the majority of new diseases to have surfaced in the past 25 years can be traced to the mosquito. "Deadly Messengers" recounts the stories of scientists and health workers who battled the mosquito, and examines current efforts to control mosquito and other vector-borne diseases - including the development of new vaccines to protect the world's most vulnerable populations.

Nutrient-enriched products have dramatically reduced instances of vitamin-deficiency in the United States, but such illnesses continue to plague the developing world. In addition to nutritional deficits, many people in poorer countries suffer from easily preventable diseases because they lack other basic necessities, such as clean water and sanitation. "Back to the Basics" explores the vital connection between health and these essential requirements. It also examines how America's overabundance of nutrition - in the form of overconsumption - is causing problems such as obesity and adult-onset diabetes, which are beginning to spread to the rest of the world. In the past 100 years, public health and scientific advances have more than doubled life expectancy in developed countries and increased longevity in some developing nations. However, the steady advances of the past century have been under serious assault in recent years. In the last few decades alone, 30 new infectious diseases have emerged. New diseases travel the globe with unprecedented rapidity, and older killers that seemed controllable are roaring back as current medicines lose their effectiveness. This episode examines some of the most critical and emerging threats, and the need to strengthen public health systems and leadership worldwide.

NOW investigates the latest on potentially deadly targets for terrorists- America's nuclear power plants, which have been the focus of increased security efforts since 9/11. While the industry and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission say the nation's nuclear reactors are up to meeting the terrorist threat, critics believe new security measures don't go far enough and that dangerous targets, including spent nuclear fuel rods stored outside the containment domes, remain exposed to attack. The report evaluates how vulnerable the facilities are to terrorism and sheds light on the new security standards. In October, the President signed a bill that gives broad immunity to gun manufacturers and retailers from civil law suits. And last year, the gun industry won a provision to block critical information on crime guns from reaching the public and even local law enforcement officials. Why would they do that? Insider Robert Ricker says it's because of profits. NOW talks to Ricker, the first major whistleblower from the gun industry, who says major gun manufacturers are deliberately looking the other way while some dealers sell their guns to criminals. Ricker, former executive director of the American Shooting Sports Council, is now battling the industry he used to protect and says they could do a lot more to take illegal guns off our streets. The candidates courted them as a key vote in the last Presidential election, but are things getting better or worse for America's struggling single women? NOW reports on what issues are important to single women through the eyes of one Nevada mom, who is trying to make ends meet in the face of skyrocketing health insurance and fuel costs.

In the uncertain weeks following September 11, an internal power struggle was underway deep inside the Bush administration. Waged between partisans at the highest levels of the government, that battle --captured in a series of blunt memos -- exemplifies the struggle to create a legal framework to give the president authority to aggressively interrogate enemy fighters in the war on terror. FRONTLINE goes behind closed doors to investigate the struggle over how and when to use what was called "coercive interrogation." The film begins with a policy born out of fear and anger and tracks how increasingly tough measures were taken to gather information about Al Qaeda, Osama bin Laden and finally the rising insurgency in Iraq. In an examination that begins at the White House and ends in the public debate about alleged abuses at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Abu Ghraib, policy makers, government interrogators and their subjects talk to FRONTLINE about their experiences as part of this internal battle.

In the uncertain weeks following September 11, an internal power struggle was underway deep inside the Bush administration. Waged between partisans at the highest levels of the government, that battle --captured in a series of blunt memos -- exemplifies the struggle to create a legal framework to give the president authority to aggressively interrogate enemy fighters in the war on terror. FRONTLINE goes behind closed doors to investigate the struggle over how and when to use what was called "coercive interrogation." The film begins with a policy born out of fear and anger and tracks how increasingly tough measures were taken to gather information about Al Qaeda, Osama bin Laden and finally the rising insurgency in Iraq. In an examination that begins at the White House and ends in the public debate about alleged abuses at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Abu Ghraib, policy makers, government interrogators and their subjects talk to FRONTLINE about their experiences as part of this internal battle.

In "Global Health: America's Response" NOW examines the U.S.'s HIV/AIDS policy from its beginning in the early 1980s through President Bush's historic plan, announced in 2003, to spend $15 billion for treatment and prevention of HIV/AIDS around the world. The one-hour documentary takes viewers on the ground in Uganda to examine how Uganda's successful three-pronged approach, which has become known as ABC: "Abstinence," "Be faithful," and "Condom use," has sparked controversy among both American and Ugandan groups, which don't believe condoms are effective in reducing HIV prevalence and that they contribute to promiscuity. Buoyed by the fact that at least 33% of U.S. money in President Bush's plan set aside for prevention must go to groups that promote so-called "abstinence-only" programs, which downplay or ignore the importance of condoms in HIV prevention.

The costs of gas and home heating oil are near record highs, and so are profits for the major players in the oil industry. Do hurricanes and the cost of crude oil account for sharp price increases, or is Big Oil making big money by driving prices up? NOW's Maria Hinojosa investigates the real reasons behind skyrocketing oil prices and asks if a concerted industry strategy has rigged the system. Plus, Secret justice. A David Brancaccio essay on the secret prisons of the war on terror.

Thousands of immigrant workers are being lured into New Orleans to help rebuild the city after Hurricane Katrina. But are corporations shutting out the local workforce and boosting profits by hiring these workers with low pay, no benefits, and awful working conditions? NOW Senior Correspondent Maria Hinojosa looks at who's benefiting from the reconstruction along the Gulf Coast, and how the Bush Administration's post-Katrina policies might have encouraged the exploitation of workers. This week, the Senate voted overwhelmingly for an amendment that called for the White House to give progress reports on the Iraq war. What does that vote, as well as the on-going CIA leak investigation, mean for the Bush Administration? "There's no question this president and this presidency is weakened," says John Dean, who served as counsel to Richard Nixon thirty years ago.

Military recruitment has become commonplace on high school campuses thanks to a little-known provision of the education law "No Child Left Behind," which forces schools to open their doors to the military or risk losing federal funds. Schools are also being forced to turn over private information about students to the Pentagon, which has angered many parents. NOW looks at how some parents are fighting back, worried that the military is reeling in impressionable kids with deceptive pitches and by exaggerating benefits. Minister of the Pilgrim United Church of Christ in Carlsbad, CA, Madison Shockley says separation of church and state doesn't mean that churches can't act in political ways. "I can't understand a definition of politics that doesn't impact every aspect of life," he tells David Brancaccio. "Whether it's seeking peace in the world, or whether it's seeking equality economically for all personal of these things have political ramifications." Shockley's powerful and insightful commentaries have been published in papers across the country.

NOW investigates the latest on potentially deadly targets for terrorists-- America's nuclear power plants, which have been the focus of increased security efforts since 9/11. While the industry and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission say the nation's nuclear reactors are up to meeting the terrorist threat, critics believe new security measures don't go far enough and that dangerous targets, including spent nuclear fuel rods stored outside the containment domes, remain exposed to attack. The report evaluates how vulnerable the facilities are to terrorism and sheds light on the new security standards. In October, the President signed a bill that gives broad immunity to gun manufacturers and retailers from civil law suits. And last year, the gun industry won a provision to block critical information on crime guns from reaching the public and even local law enforcement officials. Why would they do that? Insider Robert Ricker says it's because of profits. NOW talks to Ricker, the first major whistleblower from the gun industry, who says major gun manufacturers are deliberately looking the other way while some dealers sell their guns to criminals. Ricker, former executive director of the American Shooting Sports Council, is now battling the industry he used to protect and says they could do a lot more to take illegal guns off our streets. The candidates courted them as a key vote in the last Presidential election, but are things getting better or worse for America's struggling single women? NOW reports on what issues are important to single women through the eyes of one Nevada mom, who is trying to make ends meet in the face of skyrocketing health insurance and fuel costs.

Frances Moore Lappe, who is considered a leading thinker about the significance of individuals' choices in improving the world, talks with David Brancaccio about redefining our democracy from something done to us to something done for us. "People are just building up their citizenship and saying, 'Yes, I can help create the power to make democracy come to life to serve us.'" Lappe is author or co-author of fourteen books, including the three-million-copy bestseller DIET FOR A SMALL PLANET, which awakened a whole generation to the human-made causes of hunger. Her latest book DEMOCRACY'S EDGE reframes democracy as a powerful tool. It reveals the hidden story of a living democracy emerging to meet the unprecedented challenges of our time. Diane Wilson took on a giant chemical company and forced it to stop dumping chemicals along her beloved Gulf Coast, where she was a fourth-generation shrimp boat captain. David Brancaccio talks with the mother of five about her experience as a real-world example of how individual citizens can create change in a democracy. "I started out trying to go through the typical route, and I find out real quick that the regulatory process does not work," she says. Wilson chronicled the battle she took to the courts, to the gates of the chemical plant, and to the halls of government in the book AN UNREASONABLE WOMAN. Of her epic tale of nonviolent disobedience, direct action, and debilitating hunger strikes, the SAN DIEGO UNION-TRIBUNE wrote: "This book does for environmentalism what ALL THE PRESIDENT'S MEN did for government reform."

FRONTLINE/WORLD and "New York Times" reporter Lowell Bergman travels to the peaks of the Peruvian Andes to uncover the story of a secret battle for Yanacocha, the world's richest gold mine. With undercover tapes and inside sources, Bergman reveals high-level political intrigue including attempts to influence Peru's supreme court to rule in favor of an American company. The program investigates Newmont Mining of Denver, Colorado, the company that won control of the Peruvian mine and has since become the world's most profitable gold mining company with operations in Indonesia, Ghana and Uzbekistan. Newmont publicly pledges that it operates using U.S. environmental and ethical standards overseas even in countries where corruption is the norm, but insiders say that just has not been true. Bergman meets the crusading priest who leads local campesinos who have opposed expansion of the mine after a toxic mercury spill by Newmont led to health problems in their community.

Thousands of immigrant workers are being lured into New Orleans to help rebuild the city after Hurricane Katrina. But are corporations shutting out the local workforce and boosting profits by hiring these workers with low pay, no benefits, and awful working conditions? NOW Senior Correspondent Maria Hinojosa looks at who's benefiting from the reconstruction along the Gulf Coast, and how the Bush Administration's post-Katrina policies might have encouraged the exploitation of workers. This week, the Senate voted overwhelmingly for an amendment that called for the White House to give progress reports on the Iraq war. What does that vote, as well as the on-going CIA leak investigation, mean for the Bush Administration? "There's no question this president and this presidency is weakened," says John Dean, who served as counsel to Richard Nixon thirty years ago.

Frances Moore Lappe, who is considered a leading thinker about the significance of individuals' choices in improving the world, talks with David Brancaccio about redefining our democracy from something done to us to something done for us. "People are just building up their citizenship and saying, 'Yes, I can help create the power to make democracy come to life to serve us.'" Lappe is author or co-author of fourteen books, including the three-million-copy bestseller DIET FOR A SMALL PLANET, which awakened a whole generation to the human-made causes of hunger. Her latest book DEMOCRACY'S EDGE reframes democracy as a powerful tool. It reveals the hidden story of a living democracy emerging to meet the unprecedented challenges of our time. Diane Wilson took on a giant chemical company and forced it to stop dumping chemicals along her beloved Gulf Coast, where she was a fourth-generation shrimp boat captain. David Brancaccio talks with the mother of five about her experience as a real-world example of how individual citizens can create change in a democracy. "I started out trying to go through the typical route, and I find out real quick that the regulatory process does not work," she says. Wilson chronicled the battle she took to the courts, to the gates of the chemical plant, and to the halls of government in the book AN UNREASONABLE WOMAN. Of her epic tale of nonviolent disobedience, direct action, and debilitating hunger strikes, the SAN DIEGO UNION-TRIBUNE wrote: "This book does for environmentalism what ALL THE PRESIDENT'S MEN did for government reform."

The average American family today carries 10 credit cards. Credit card debt and personal bankruptcies are now at an all time high. With no legal limit on the amount of interest or fees that can be charged, credit cards have become the most profitable sector of the American banking industry: more than $30 billion in profits last year alone. FRONTLINE and the New York Times examine how the credit card industry became so pervasive, so lucrative and so politically powerful.
